Imagine time slowing down to the rhythms of nature. The air carries the distinct scent of damp soil, mingling with the fragrance of blooming flowers. The Vembanad lake is alive with activity, as fishermen cast their Chinese nets into the still waters.

Ducks glide by gracefully, while country canoes gently trace paths across its surface. The lush greenery all around provides the perfect backdrop to this idyllic sight.

All that's left is for you to step into it.

As you turn off the highway, the road unfolds with a series of delightful sights - roadside tea stalls serving hot cups of sugary chai, bustling vegetable vendors, and quaint shops dotting the landscape. The town gradually fades into the distance, and the path winds through idyllic villages, bordered by narrow roads shaded by tropical fruit trees.

Finally, you reach the peaceful waterside. You've arrived at CGH Earth Saha Hibiscus. This serene retreat, located by the Vembanad lake, is a waterfront private pool villa tucked away in an inland coastal village on the Kerala Backwaters.

At Hibiscus Villa, sustainability is integral to every aspect,
from the foundation to the rooftop.

Recycled wood from vintage beams and pillars has been repurposed into doors and windows.

Crafted from locally sourced laterite bricks, which are more carbon-neutral than traditional materials, the villa's structure seamlessly blends with the natural landscape.

The villa operates on an off-grid photovoltaic system, supplying energy for everything, from air-conditioned bedrooms to the sparkling pool. Rainwater is harvested and treated to meet 80% of the water needs, with the surplus nourishing the lush garden via a peaceful lily pond.

In line with its zero-waste philosophy, kitchen scraps are converted into biogas for cooking, while the nutrient-rich residue enhances the vegetable garden.

It's a mindful escape in an idyllic setting, blending slow travel with holistic, earth-friendly experiences.
